NEW USE FOR STRAWS

Messed-up soda shop is evidence of Michigan's young fry's new fad

In Ludington, Michigan the Park Dairy Bar took on a new look. There young Ludingtonites added a new gimmick to the old trick of using straws as blowguns. They discovered that when the casings in which straws come wrapped are dipped in malted milks and then blown upward, they stick to the ceiling in a juicy stain. At first Owner Robert Neal tried knocking the straws off, but the next day there would always be more suspended above him. Now he is resigned to having his place look like a subterranean grotto hung with stalactites because, though the malted-bearing missiles make an awful mess, his youthful patrons have taken to ordering several malteds at a time to insure a plentiful supply of ammunition.
